SUBJECT: ICRC ACCESSES CIVILIANS SOUTH OF THE LITANI RIVER

REF: SEPTTEL

¶1. (SBU) ICRC Middle East and North Africa Regional Director Balthasar Staehelin told the Ambassador August 9 that ICRC successfully mounted a humanitarian mission August 8 to evacuate approximately 230 civilians from Houla, south of the Litani River. (See Septel.) Staehelin said that ICRC deconflicted its movements with both the Northern Command of the Israeli Defense Forces (IDF) and with Hizballah fighters. Staehelin explained that ICRC moved in a secure "bubble" or "box" established to envelope a small convoy of ICRC vehicles, rather than through any sort of secure "corridor" demarcated on the battlefield.

¶2. (SBU) ICRC established a secure bubble, Staehelin said, by asking the combatants to refrain from firing on or near the precise route of the convoy; the bubble was limited both geographically and temporally, according to the deconflicted route and schedule of the ICRC vehicles. A secure corridor, by contrast, relies on geography rather than movement, is not feasible in a combat zone and has proved less effective at affording protection to humanitarian convoys, according to Staehelin. He also emphasized that the coordination necessary to create a secure bubble requires clear and precise communication among ICRC, Hizballah, and the IDF.

¶3. (SBU) The Ambassador asked whether ICRC has considered using satellite tracking equipment to help protect their vehicles. Staehelin said that these instruments would draw attention to ICRC vehicles that could lead to their theft, and could attract civilians or combatants to follow ICRC vehicles along their routes, under the assumption that the equipment provides reliable protection.
